With his new project You made me a monster, William Forsythe moves between installation, performance, and sonic environment.

"Intricate and grotesque skeletal models, constructed by both the audience and performers alike, fill the performing space. These models serve as a score that leads the transformed voices of the performers through a complex, soaring matrix of grief".

William Forsythe

A Production by The Forsythe Company in Coproduction with La Biennale di Venezia and Tanz im August, Berlin.
Supported by Siemens Arts Program.

In the course of the research project William Forsythe & Forum Neues Musiktheater

“I always wanted the dancers to be their own instrument”

William Forsythe

The Forum is developing new applications of technology for sound production and manipulation for the Forsythe Company that will enable to dancers to produce a mixture of movement, speaking, singing, and electronic sounds in real time. Aspects of this work could be seen in the new production Three Atmospheric Studies by William Forsythe and The Forsythe Company, which premiered on April 2005 in the Bockenheimer Depot in Frankfurt am Main. As an example for the results of the research work Forum Neues Musiktheater presents in January 2006 the performance-installation You made me a monster in five shows.

Tickets sale starts one month before the performance. Tickets +49 (0)711 202090.
